Dunham Public Library's Internet Access Policy

When you access the Internet using Library computers...

The Internet is an unregulated medium on which any person or group in the world can place data. It is a global entity, which does not fall under the control of any single organization. There are no limits on the kinds of information presented to Internet users.

Dunham Public Library openly offers access to the world of electronic media, such as the Internet, as part of its mission of providing services and materials to meet the requirements of the district it has been chartered to serve. This philosophy is fully outlined in the Library Bill of Rights and Freedom to Read documents, both available upon request at the Information Desk, which guarantees library customers full access to all information and media.

As an electronic information source, the content of the Internet, its accuracy, timeliness or suitability cannot be guaranteed. Like the Library itself, use of the Internet is not a right; it is a privilege and should be treated as such.

Dunham Public Library has the authority to implement reasonable practices and procedures governing the use of the Internet .

We disclaim any liability or responsibility arising from access to or use of information obtained through the Internet or any consequences thereof. Customers may not utilize the Internet illegally.

Examples of inappropriate use include, but are not limited to, the following:

1. To harass other people, for criminal purposes, for pornographic purposes,
2. To download or instal I software onto the library's existing system;
3. To invade another user 's privacy.

Network access to the Internet is unfiltered but screen views of public access computer are available to library staff.
